Reinforced Concrete

By A. W. Buel and Chas S. Hill

Second Edition. Revised and Enlarged

It was the intention of the publishers to issue this new edition on or before the first of May, 1906, and announcement of that date was duly published, but information since received, as to a series of new and important tests of Reinforced Concrete Beams made it advisable to consider a delay in the date of publication. After consultation with the authors, it was decided that on account of the valuable nature of these tests, the issue of the book would be delayed until June in order to enable us to include the results. Those already tabulated have been embodied in the text under "Methods of Calculation," and the balance will be comprised in an Appendix inserted at the end of the book, to prevent any loss of time in the final make-up and completion of the book, when all the results have been obtained.

While we realize that this delay has been somewhat of an inconvenience to the many engineers who have daily use for the book, and regard it as the standard authority on reinforced concrete construction, we feel sure that the introduction into it of these valuable data, including text, tables, formulas and diagrams, will warrant the delay, by their bringing the work most thoroughly up-to-date and making it even more fully than in the past, justify its claim as the most complete treatise on this subject to be had in the English language.
